GREENER Cleaner Grapevine

Save Water. Nothing Can Replace It!

Did your yard and your pocketbook take a beating during the recent drought? If so, now is a great time to move towards a drought-tolerant landscape. This type of landscape can be more than just cactus and rocks. You can have a beautiful, colorful yard that provides great enjoyment all year long. Maintaining a traditional non-drought tolerant landscape, under environmental conditions similar to what was experienced this year, requires tremendous amounts of water. By selecting native and/or adapted plants for your landscape, you can enjoy beautiful flowering plants, shrubs and trees without draining your pocketbook or our local reservoirs.

Following are items that need to be considered to achieve a natural landscaped area that will reduce the amount of water needed and look amazing.

Plant the right plant in the correct location by determining the amount of sunlight needed in each area of your lawn.

Mulch beds to retain moisture and prevent weeds.

St. Augustine or fescue grass is recommended in shaded areas, Zoysia, Buffalo, and Bermuda are recommended in sunny areas.

Reduce the amount of turf area to meet the aesthetic or family needs, because grass usually tends to take more water and chemicals to maintain.

Use pervious pavement that allows water to soak up into the ground or surrounding areas. This can be pavers, mulch, or pervious concrete if a full design is being implemented.

Incorporate rain barrels into the landscape design to capture rain water for use on lawns and bedding plants.

A how-to guide that teaches concepts of landscaping with native and adapted plants can be found at <http://www.txsmartscape.com>. This program will show you how to conserve water, protect the environment, and beautify your home.

With continued growth a certainty for our area, we must all learn to use our water resources more conservatively or face restrictive water rationing in the future. 🍇

Keeping Our Waterways Clear – Not Green

During certain times of the year, you may notice that creeks, ponds and even the lake turns green. This change in color happens quickly, and the cause is often due to excessive nutrients (fertilizers) in the water. Nutrients from fertilizers, like nitrogen and phosphorus, promote algae blooms and excessive plant growth in water, which leads to the green coloration. Some algae blooms in fresh water may only be a nuisance, but others can deplete dissolved oxygen in the water or generate biotoxins that are harmful to birds, fish, and other animals. Most often the source is man-made. Below is a list of nutrient sources that negatively impact our water.

Fertilizers – Improperly fertilizing your lawn and garden can allow excess fertilizers to enter our storm drain system and feed the algae in our waters. To prevent this, test the soil to determine what fertilizer is needed, fertilize sparingly, and avoid applying in a manner that will allow the fertilizer to drain into storm drains.

Lawn Trimmings – Sweeping or blowing large amounts of leaves and clippings into the street can quickly “super-fertilize” streams and lakes. To prevent this, sweep grass clippings and leaves back on your lawn to act as a natural fertilizer.

Washing the Car – Washing your car with soap or even biodegradable soap can provide a key ingredient (phosphorus) for algae production. Most detergents are high in phosphates, a limiting nutrient for algae production in area streams, ponds, and lakes. To prevent this, wash your car at a car wash center.

Pet Waste – When pet waste decays, it uses up oxygen and releases ammonia. To prevent this, pick up your pet waste and dispose of it properly.

Following these few guidelines will help keep our waters clean and clear all year round. 🍇

Combined with the Mustang Drive and North Airfield Drive project completed by the D/FW Airport earlier this year, these projects offer a parallel route to the SH114/SH121 corridor. The connection to SH 114 at Freeport Parkway allows motorists to bypass the construction area.

Additional information is available at www.DFWConnector.com. If you have questions, please call 817-410-3136. 🍇
